Nabilah MOHAMAD and Vui Heng CHONG

A lady in her mid thirties was admitted with increasing epigastric and right upper quadrant colicky pain. She had had this pain on and off for the previous few months and was particularly worse after meal. An abdominal X-ray was taken (Panel A) she was advised to undergo an endoscopic procedure which she declined. Her symptoms improved and she was discharged against medical advice. She was given anti-spasmodic and was seen again in clinic in two weeks times. She reported that her symptoms had became worst after discharge but had subsequently improved since. A repeat radiograph was taken ( Panel B).

Q: What is the diagnosis?

Answer: refer to page 356*
