

Lih Vei ONN and Vui Heng CHONG

A 65-year-old lady presented with a chronic history of constipation, progressively difficulty with walking and requiring assistance with activities of daily living (ADLs). She has been becoming more cognitively impaired. Family and carer have always noted spontaneous movements of both the hands and lower limbs, more obvious at rest or when patient's attentions are distracted (Panels: click on the images to view the videos).

Q: What is the diagnosis?
